OVERVIEW

Honey is a member of the firm's Professional Liability Department where she focuses her practice on architectural, engineering and construction defect litigation, representing general contractors, subcontractors, manufacturers, suppliers and architects and engineers in claims brought against them in a broad range of construction projects and disputes, both individually and through insurance carriers.

With over two decades of experience as a practicing attorney, a large portion of Honey's practice has been focused on the construction industry, specifically in construction defect defense litigation. Honey also has strong experience in additional areas including insurance defense, general liability, first party property and hybrid personal injury matters.

Honey has handled the defense of cases in federal and state courts, as well as arbitration forums, including the American Arbitration Association.
